

Where is the Success of a Team?

In my opinion if the success is defined as accomplishing the principal objective that a team has established at the beginning of a project.

The success can be found all along the life cycle of a project, it is constructed by the hard work and dedication of all the team. And what does this construction is made of? Well in each phase of the project there is decisive tasks that need to be present, like teamwork, analyzing, testing, work on time, etc.

Why is it important to follow a methodology?

A methodology it's a group of processes that are usually used to achieve a certain objective in projects or investigations that need special skills and knowledge to be accomplished. And the reason why are they that important, it's because after several time of investigation it has been found that the methodology's guarantee efficient results if they are followed step by step, guiding people towards success.

Because on the other hand if a project is developed without following standards, it doesn't mean that is going to always fail, but one thing is for sure the developing of the project or investigation will not mitigate the risks in the same way a methodology will.
